

It is hard for me to conceive of a world in which six large companies serving the entire US could be considered not a dominant market force. Especially considering the market force they control. I was served by one of the large firms, and they sold me like a slave to another company. Did I have a choice, hardly!! My choice was, go to the new company or no phone service.

Let's increase competition, and let market forces set service levels and prices. Let's open access to the wires, and cables. How can a company get exclusive control of a right-of-way, then claim that no-one else is so entitled? I don't to see five wires on a pole, but I do want freedom of choice for the service providers. Please do what it takes to make this business as open to the market as possible.
